Local Items.

DR. LEAS lectures on "Queen Elizabeth" in the Rose street Presbyterian Church this evening. The admirers of that strong-minded lady and all who can appreciate an eloquent and accurate presentation of one of the most interesting periods in English history will find rare enjoyment in this subject.

A LIVELY article entitled "A Safe Criterion," will be found in another column, being a specimen of the pleasant paragraphs found in the Messrs. Spiers & Pond's letter to the ends of the earth, the appetizing flavor from their sumptuous restaurant in Piccadilly, West End, London. Spiers & Pond know how to write as well as cater for the creature comforts of their guests.

ADELINA, the celebrated harpist, formerly a prominent member of the orchestra of the great Juillien, will give a recital at Steinway Hall, N. Y., on Thursday afternoon. His programme will include a number of selections probably never attempted on a harp before an American audience, such as Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata," Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith," and some of Mendelssohn's "Songs without Words." Besides these there are a number of miscellaneous selections and several of the performer's own composition which are of an original and striking character.

MRS. E. M. GRAY, magnetic physician, late of the Wall House, has removed to 84 Kemp street.

CENTENNIAL—HOW TO SEE NEW YORK AND ITS ENVIRONS. By Robert Mackay, 1776–1876. A complete Guide and Heirloom of Useful Information, collected from the latest reliable sources. New York: Robert Mackay, publisher, No. 4 Barclay street.

Everything just now is "Centennial", but one of the most sensible things in this line that we have seen is the little publication before us, which gives for the information of the Centennial tourist, a complete picture of New York as it was and as it is; taking the new comer back to the primitive times, and showing him what New York was when the century began, and leading him to form a proper estimate of the growth of the greatest city on the continent. The book illustrates this transformation by engravings of the principal points of interest as they were two hundred and a hundred years ago, with engravings of the same localities as they appear at the present time. Thus we have the canal in Broad street in 1676; Governor Stuyvesant's house at Whitehall in 1658; a view near Coenties Slip in 1658; the dock and river front, and the Black House and City Gate at the foot of Wall street in 1658; the same point again in 1857, and again in 1874, with other scenes of a like character along the North and East Rivers, front that period until the present time, showing at a glance the marvellous strides the great city has taken in its expansion to its present gigantic proportions. In addition to this the book gives a history of the city, in which of course is embodied a large amount of the most valuable statistical information. It is a little compendium of information such as any citizen will find at times of great value.

Obituary.

James M. Wade.

The recent demise of Deacon James M. Wade, so long and favorably known in this city and New York, was so unexpected, except to his immediate relatives, that a brief outline of the circumstances, and a sketch of his life and character, cannot fail to prove interesting to many of our readers. Though always remarkably quiet and unobtrusive in his manners and habits, he has so long been known as a real estate agent on Broadway, and in the immediate neighborhood of the TIMES office, that many who beg no personal acquaintance with him will readily recall his familiar features.

Deacon Wade was born in the city of New York, February 19, 1816, and consequently just entered upon his sixty-first year—his ancestors having been of old English stock. He was left an orphan at the age of twelve or fourteen, and his brother and sister having also died soon after the decease of his parents, he was left the chief support of a half sister. At the age of twenty, he became the junior partner in a coffee-roasting and spice establishment in New York; but his health failing, he was forced to leave the business, and subsequently became a builder in this city, with varying success. At the beginning of the late war he was the owner of considerable property, but lost it all in the panic that ensued. Since that time, he has been engaged chiefly in the real estate business, as before mentioned. He was a man of sound judgment and managed well; and in all his dealings he bore a character of the strictest integrity. In his family especially, he was revered almost to idolatry; and, indeed, wherever known he was held in the highest respect. Besides his excellent widow, he leaves a family of four sons, among whom are one successful and well known physician, Dr. James D., and John E. Wade.

In his religious predilections Deacon Wade was a firm Baptist of the old school, as were his ancestors before him. His grandfather was not only one of the constituent members of Rev. Dr. Oliver Hoyt's Baptist Church, in New York, but was a licentiate preacher of that sacred body, and it was in his dwelling that Rev. John Williams, father of the present Rev. Dr. Williams, preached his first sermon in English. Deacon Wade became one of the constituent members of the Second Baptist Church, Williamsburgh, about twenty-five years ago, and was its first Sunday School superintendent. In 1858 he removed his church relations to the South Baptist church, now the Lee Avenue Baptist, and long served as one of its deacons.

Of his early colleagues in that office, Messrs. John B. Wells, Henry J. Oakley, John G. West, and T. W. Valentine, the latter being now the only survivor. Deacon Wade afterwards removed to the Gethsemane Church, and, finally, on the organization of the new Trinity Baptist Church about a year ago, he became one of its constituent members, and remained one of its deacons and its treasurer until his death. To all of these relations he was ever regarded as being his brethren as one of the best and truest of men.

For some months past his health has been failing, but no dangerous symptoms appeared until pneumonia set in and terminated his life on Saturday morning last. His funeral was attended at the Central Baptist Church on Monday afternoon, Rev. Dr. Hodge and Rev. C. Rhodes officiating. But for the drenching rain the office would have been thronged; as it was, a large and sympathizing audience was in attendance. He was buried at Cypress Hills Cemetery.

Hattie F. Burgess.

Died on Sunday April 2, 1876, Hattie F. Burgess, daughter of Joshua F. and Louise Burgess, aged sixteen years. For months she had been a patient and uncomplaining sufferer, yet was not considered dangerously ill, until a day or two before her death. Her loss will be greatly felt not only by the family, but also by a very large circle of friends to whom she was endeared by her kind, sweet and gentle disposition. The large attendance at the funeral services, the floral offering, tributes of love and affection from her classmates and others, was such as showed how much she was beloved and esteemed.

GREENPOINT NEWS.

Mr. Simons' Watch—How It Went Mysteriously and How it Returned—Personal—The Converted Actress—The Bridge—A Greenpoint Workman Killed.

Mr. Simons' Watch.

Mr. A. B. Simons of 155 Conselyea street had occasion to cross the street at Twenty Third street from a horse car, and had occasion to remember his trip. In passing watch and chain which were in their usual place he had to pass through the ferry gates. In so doing he had a partial glance at a portly dressed individual of the Greenpoint police that a sweet pickpocket had snatched his watch from his vest pocket and escaped. The policeman, all their commiserations for his state, and rebuffs finding the fact that the thief had evidently stolen a watch, they kept a watch for him. Their generosity remained unappreciated. They might as well have pocket in peace and saved their time, for the fine piece was gone, and it was evidently a case with the watch. Yesterday, however, a gentleman called at the Greenpoint Police Station, and said that while he was passing Bushwick Branch Do street ferry gates on Friday evening, he brushed against an individual who was paying his fare, and that when he got into the car he found a watch and chain suspended from one of his coat buttons. He was, he said, for some time, puzzled to know how it came there, but a second at Mr. Simon's loss in the newspapers solved the problem, and he took it to the owner, now in its rightful owner's pocket.

Personal.

Immediately after the close of his regular weekly lecture last evening, the Rev. Dr. Henry Miller left Greenpoint for Boston. His wife and son are both lying sick in that city. He will probably return before Sunday next.

The Converted Actress.

Mrs. Lowery, "the converted actress," who was to have commenced a series of revival services in the First M. E. Church this week, has been prevented from so doing by sickness. She will probably begin them next week.

The Bridge.

Supervisor Clark says that if he could secure the removal of the horse shoes which is built on the sidewalk near the Bridge across Newtown Creek at Vernon place, by any other means he will agitate the subject by public meetings.

A Greenpoint Workman Killed.

William Feeney, of 188 Greenpoint avenue, was killed on the New York Gas Works yesterday while working at a new machine, now being fitted up there. The machine fell on him and death ensued in a few seconds. Feeney was employed at the Continental Works, foot of Calyer street, the proprietor of the works having the contract for the construction of the new machine.
