DIED AIDING SICK CHILD.

Dr. James D. Wade, one of the best-known practitioners of Williamsburg, who lived at 252 South Ninth Street, died suddenly from heart disease late on Sunday night while prescribing for a sick child of Charles Eaton, at 736 Wythe Avenue.

It is thought that the physician's sudden death was hastened by learning of the death on Sunday afternoon of his friend Dr. Thomas G. Underwood of 520 Bedford Avenue. A widow and son survive Dr. Wade.
