Hipster Skirts Nothing New —Warriors Once Wore Them

By PATRICIA MCCORMACK

NEW YORK (UPI) — Those low-slung hipster skirts dame fashion decrees chic for spring aren't so new — and men once wore them.

The navel-exposing skirts are a take-off or modification of a fashion trend for warriors back in the 16th Century.

The proof comes into clear view at the 18th annual National Antiques Show now underway in New York.

There for all to gaze at is a statue of Mars, the god of war and agriculture. The statue's metal skirt is positioned on the hips. Mars looks as though he's wearing kilts that slipped from the natural waist to the hips.

Executed Around 1565

The statue of Mars in a hipster skirt was executed around 1565 by Tiziano Aspetti. It is owned by Edward R. Lubin, of New York.

The statue is among $20 million worth of antiques being shown by 250 dealers, exhibitors and collectors at the world's largest antiques exposition.

Mars aside, what else intrigues the novice at an antique show is listing in the program for the "National Old Lacers."

At first look, it seems the collectors of old shoe strings have organized.

Collection Of People

"Not so," said Nat Major, director of the show. "The 'old lacers' are a collection of people drawn together by their interest in old lace."

Major said most antiques, to be considered bona fide, must be at least 100 years old. Oddments such as buttons, letters, playthings and clothing don't become valuable antiques on age alone, however.

"Personal effects," Major said, "only become valuable if the person who used them became famous."

"One way of making things about you valuable is to become famous. But don't you expect to cash in on their worth. More likely they will become valuable in the years after you're gone. If anyone cashes in on them, most likely it will be your great-great-grandchildren."

Eggs Take Spotlight For Lenten Meals

Eggs for centuries have been a symbol of the coming of spring. With the advent of the Lenten season eggs take on even greater importance in the family menu.

Sturdy eating is provided by eggs in combination with seafood, such as a seafood omelet. Plain omelets, sized for individual servings, are the easiest and quickest kind to make. They wrap around a filling of salmon, green peas and mushroom soup concentrate.

Filling

1 pkg. frozen peas
1 can salmon (7¾ oz.)
1 can cream of mushroom soup (undiluted)
Salt and pepper to taste

Combine filling ingredients in a saucepan and heat. Keep hot until omelets are baked.

Omelets

9 eggs
½ cup water
1 tsp. salt
Fat or oil for cooking

Beat eggs, water and salt together until light and foamy. Preheat electric griddle or grill to 300-325 degrees (low heat), brushing entire surface with fat or oil. Slowly pour ¼ cup of the egg mixture on the griddle for each omelet, allowing it to spread. When omelets are set and lightly browned on the bottom, place two tablespoons of filling in the center of each omelet. Fold both sides over the narrow spatula. Omelets can be kept warm on side of griddle until serving time. Makes 12 omelets or six servings.

Serve with French fried potatoes, a tossed salad with mandarin orange sections, corn bread, cherry pie and coffee.
